

ABSTRACT

Banknotes are classified by determining their spectral characteristics in respective areas using diffusely-reflected light from the banknote and/or 5 light transmitted through the banknote. In addition, the surface condition of the banknote is detected by using specularly-reflected light. Preferably, the same transmitter is used to generate the light which is diffusely-reflected and specularly-reflected.